MEREDITH COLLEGE

Co-host of the 2012 NCAA Division III Men's and Women's Tennis Championships

Founded in 1891, Meredith College is one of the largest independent women's colleges in the United States. Meredith offers comprehensive liberal arts and professional studies for undergraduate women.

Located in the capital city of Raleigh, North Carolina, Meredith also offers coeducational M.B.A., M.A.T., M.Ed. and M.S. in nutrition programs and coeducational business, paralegal, dietetics and pre-health certificate programs. Meredith has been cited as one of the "best colleges" in the region and the country by U.S. News & World Report, Princeton Review and Forbes.com.

With 32 majors, Meredith provides a transformative education, emphasizing hands-on learning, international study and leadership development. Campus life is shaped by a diverse, welcoming community of nearly 2,000 students from 32 states and 47 countries. Students "learn by doing" through internships, undergraduate research and service projects in the community. Meredith's location near Research Triangle Park and downtown Raleigh gives students direct access to unique internship and volunteer opportunities. As a result, 81 percent of students participate in internships, service-learning or another kind of learning through experience.

Meredith professors are committed professionals who care deeply about their students' learning, in and out of class. The undergraduate student-to-faculty ratio is approximately 11-to-1, while the average class size is 17. Of the 124 full-time faculty members, 91 percent have earned doctoral or terminal degrees. A dynamic undergraduate research program supports student/faculty partnerships in the pursuit of research and creative activity in all fields. Forty-one percent of Meredith students participate in undergraduate research with a faculty member (the national average is 21 percent).

Study-abroad options include faculty-led summer programs in Italy, Switzerland, Costa Rica, Iceland, France, Spain and the United Kingdom. Meredith offers a semester study abroad program at a permanent location in a renovated palazzo in Sansepolcro, Italy; students also can choose from a variety of semester and year-long travel opportunities throughout the world. Semester programs at the United Nations in New York City or in Washington, D.C., also are available.

With nearly 100 clubs and organizations, students have ample opportunities to get involved on campus. Meredith students advance their leadership skills in programs such as the Emerging Leader Seminar Series, Officer and Advisor Training, Sophie Lanneau Women's Leadership Development Program and the LeaderShape Institute.

Meredith Avenging Angels compete in seven NCAA Division III sports: basketball, soccer, volleyball, tennis, softball, cross-country and the newest addition, lacrosse, which will commence in Fall 2012. In addition, Meredith sponsors juried student exhibitions, an active concert schedule, visiting artists and exhibitions featuring professional artists. Students also participate in theatre and dance performance troupes and a variety of vocal and instrumental ensembles.

Meredith's historic, wooded 225-acre campus includes a 1,200-seat amphitheater on a lake, seven residence halls, a music library, art galleries, a research greenhouse, music practice rooms, auditoriums, a theater, concert halls, a student center, computer labs, a child care and autism lab, an astronomy observation deck, an indoor swimming pool, a fitness center, a dance studio, lighted tennis courts, an athletics field and track complex and two miles of greenway connecting campus to the community.

Other significant rankings for Meredith include being ranked seventh for "Best Value" among colleges in the South by U.S. News & World Report and named "One of 4 Great Colleges in the Southeast" by StudentAdvisor.com.

Meredith also is among the "Top 50 Alma Maters of National Board Certified Teachers." It is one of only two private institutions in the United States to make the list, which is compiled by the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards. In addition, the college is one of only two women's colleges in the world with a school of business accredited by AACSB International. Meredith holds the highest levels of program accreditation in education, social work, nutrition, music and interior design.

From the desk of NCAA President MARK EMMERT

The past year has been challenging for intercollegiate athletics. Yet the American love affair with college sports grows stronger with each point scored and every milestone achieved. We may come from different backgrounds and areas of the country, but we still gather in cheering crowds to follow our favorite teams and alma maters. At the heart of it we are captivated by young men and women whose playing fields are extensions of their classrooms and whose successes are athletic, academic and lifelong.

Our love of sports begins at an early age — if you drive past a soccer field in any town in America, you'll find children as young as three years old chasing a ball. If you visit a neighborhood gym, you'll see their older siblings developing leadership, teamwork and fairness.

If those young people join the ranks of the more than 400,000 NCAA student-athletes, they'll discover the many benefits of college sports, most of which are off the field. Independent research confirms what those of us who love sports hold true: participation as a student-athlete leads to better grades and graduation rates, higher self-esteem and more fulfilling preparation for life.

The power of intercollegiate athletics in preparing leaders is, without a doubt, the reason this enterprise has lasted more than 100 years. But college sports are more than iconic American pastimes. They develop better-educated and more involved Americans.

Intercollegiate athletics provides access to education for student-athletes who may otherwise face limited opportunities to obtain a college degree. More than 13 percent of current student-athletes are in the first generation of their families to attend college. And that's important because obtaining a bachelor's degree can increase lifetime professional earnings by $1 million or more as compared to those with only a high school diploma.

If those young people join the ranks of the more than 400,000 NCAA student-athletes, they'll discover the many benefits of college sports, most of which are off the field. Independent research confirms what those of us who love sports hold true: participation as a student-athlete leads to better grades and graduation rates, higher self-esteem and more fulfilling preparation for life.

For many student-athletes, college sports literally changes the course of their lives and the lives of those around them. For instance, Division III student-athletes partner with Special Olympics athletes to build physical fitness and experience the joy of sharing skills and friendship. Division II student-athletes raise significant funds to help the Make-A-Wish Foundation reach more kids with life-threatening medical conditions each year and grant them life-changing wishes.

What do those of us who work in intercollegiate athletics love about our jobs? Well, at some point in our lives, each of us decided to go pro in higher education. With this opportunity comes the responsibility to create an environment where student-athletes learn as much in classrooms and on campus as they do during competition.

Student-athletes often identify coaches as among the most influential people in their lives. Former student-athletes have told us their participation in college sports was vital in preparing them for life after graduation. Intercollegiate athletics shapes tomorrow's lawyers, doctors, engineers and military leaders as well as the next generation of educators.

As I interact with student-athletes, they consistently tell me there is one thing driving them to succeed: their passion for the game. As educators, it must be our passion for the enterprise of intercollegiate athletics — and the benefits it provides student-athletes — which drives us to excellence.

To that end, values-based legislation is being adopted across all three of our divisions so our rulebook reflects the outcomes we're striving to attain: a fulfilling, well-rounded college experience for each student-athlete. Simply put, we know when those invested in college sports behave in ways that deserve to be modeled, student-athletes achieve beyond anyone's expectations.

As we continue to elevate the student-athlete experience, I am confident 2012 will be a more positive year for intercollegiate athletics and provide a much richer educational experience for us all.

All things being equal

The goal of Title IX is equal participation opportunities for both genders. With that in mind, the law requires male and female student-athletes to receive athletics scholarship aid proportional to their participation opportunities. But it does not require equal dollars to be spent on men's and women's sports. It also requires equitable treatment for:

- Equipment and supplies
- Scheduling of games and practice times
- Travel and daily allowance/per diem
- Access to tutoring
- Coaching
- Locker rooms and practice and competitive facilities
- Medical and training facilities and services
- Housing and dining facilities and services
- Publicity and promotions
- Support services
- Recruitment of student-athletes

Factoids

- In 1902, the first women's college basketball game was played at Smith College behind locked doors. No male spectators were allowed.
- In 1981, the NCAA® started administering women's sports. The first NCAA women's basketball championship was played in 1982 and won by defending AIAW (Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women) champion, Louisiana Tech University, over Cheyney University of Pennsylvania.

- In 1981-82

74,239

female student-athletes on 4,776 teams.

169,800

male student-athletes on 6,843 teams.

- Today

186,460

female student-athletes on 9,660 teams.

249,307

male student-athletes on 8,530 teams.

Examining Title IX

What is Title IX? Title IX of the Education Amendments Acts of 1972 is a federal law that states: "No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving federal financial assistance."

Who does Title IX affect? It applies to all educational institutions, public and private, that receive federal funds. Almost all private colleges and universities must abide by Title IX regulations because they receive federal funding through federal financial aid programs used by their students. Schools comply in athletics by (1) providing equitable participation opportunities, (2) providing athletics financial aid equal to student-athlete participation, and (3) providing equitable benefits to participants. It affects all educational programs in schools. Since athletics programs are considered educational programs and activities, Title IX requires women and men be provided equal opportunities to participate in sports.

What are the benefits? Title IX benefits everyone. Historically, females have faced more gender barriers to education, but Title IX was written to ensure the under-represented gender – male or female – has equal access and opportunity. In fact, male participation continues to increase.

"Title IX is rather simple: don't discriminate on the basis of sex."
